a message from the dean

I am happy to unveil the new King Hall Counselor. I believe you will be pleased with our efforts to give the King Hall Community an informative and inspirational magazine. Our Marketing Team has spent the last several months investigating our history; interviewing faculty, alums and friends; writing and rewriting articles; and planning the design and layout of the new Counselor.

What could be better than to kick off our new Counselor with a history of King Hall in celebration of our 40 year anniversary? The school, state and nation's history over the past 40 years is rich in momentous happenings and events. In an effort to capture our history more completely, the article "UC Davis School of Law Celebrating 40 Years of Excellence" will appear in three parts. In this issue, we focus on the turbulent sixties. It was not that long ago, in 1965, that the first faculty and staff were hired at a school that didn't exist in any other way. I invite you to read about the tumultuous time of the sixties and those first few years that created King Hall. We are very proud of those things that have distinguished our school from the very beginning—its small size and the close association of faculty, students and staff. We are also proud of the community and family that created the rich history and strong program that is UC Davis School of Law. We are dedicated to preserve and strengthen this legacy. As we reflect on our past, we are inspired to work hard for the future and the building of an even stronger King Hall.

In this issue, we also take a look at two subjects facing America and the world today. The article, "Islam: Immigration, Human Rights and Democracy," looks at the post 9/11 era and the resulting immigration policies and awareness of the Muslim religion and culture, while the article, "Witnesses to War," looks at the democratic nature of international law and the issues facing the legitimacy of the International Criminal Court. Both of these articles highlight faculty scholarship and student activities and interests that have occurred in response to current events shaping the law and the legal community.

We end this issue of the Counselor with a look at our 2004-2005 donors. The 2004-05 campaign saw an increase in participation and celebrated its first ever class gift. Several class reunions set fundraising priorities and overall giving increased. Our alums and friends have created a sense of momentum that will build a legacy of giving. Thank you, one and all, for your support. Your support is greatly appreciated and does make a difference in the lives of our students and the future of our school.

Sincerely,

Rex R. Perschbacher
Dean

Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr.'s assassination on April 4, 1968 had an immediate impact on UC Davis law school students and faculty, who were actively involved in the legal, political, and social debates of the late sixties. When construction of the law school building was completed in the fall of 1968, a committee of students and faculty began working to name the building for Dr. King. The building was officially dedicated after Dr. King on April 12, 1969. Today, King Hall stands as a tribute to Dr. King's efforts to achieve social and political justice by lawful and orderly means.

A NEW COUNSELOR FOR KING HALL

Last summer you received a condensed version of the King Hall Counselor in preparation for its short hiatus while it underwent a transformation. Our goals seemed simple: use both print and electronic communication forms to keep connected with our alumni and friends, and do it in a way that is informative, inspirational and manageable.

We have spent the fall semester creating a new Web site, an electronic newsletter, the King Hall Briefs, and revising the King Hall Counselor. With this new issue of the King Hall Counselor, we have completed our plan and look to you to see if we have accomplished our goals.

At the beginning of the fall semester, we launched a new Web site and received many compliments on its new design and functionality. In November and December, we emailed the first two issues of the King Hall Briefs to those alums and friends who had an email address on file. The King Hall Briefs was also well received by many, with a few asking for a more text friendly version. We responded to their request by removing many of the images from the newsletter and will continue to make modifications to be user-friendly. If you have not checked out the new Web site or received the King Hall Briefs, I invite you to go to www.law.ucdavis.edu to view the Web site and www.law.ucdavis.edu/alumni/directory/ to update your contact information to receive the Briefs.

The Counselor has been a longer project with the results of our work in your hands today. The Counselor is still a work in progress. We need your input to help us further shape the publication. I invite you to critique and praise our work, to give suggestions and comments on alternatives, and to participate in interviews and write articles. Please call or email me directly at the numbers below. I look forward to hearing from you.

Sincerely,

Judy Cook

News & Notes

NEW LAW CLASS IS GIFTED AND DIVERSE

This fall, an academically gifted and diverse group of students began the pursuit of a law degree at King Hall. The Class of 2008, just under 200 students, was selected from a pool of 3,768 applicants.

The class represents a diversity of backgrounds. In addition to degrees in Political Science, History, Psychology and English, students have bachelor degrees in Biophysics, German, Asian Studies, Engineering and Art History, to name just a few. Numerous students obtained graduate degrees. Others pursued diverse paths, such as Peace Corps volunteer in Kijiv, Ukraine, army counterintelligence agent, sky diving instructor and emergency medical technician. Thirty-five percent of the students are people of color.

This year's entering class is the fortieth to enroll at UC Davis School of Law. On August 14, 2005, at 6:00 p.m., faculty, alumni board members, staff and current students convened on the banks of Putah Creek to welcome incoming students at a barbecue picnic hosted by the Office of Admissions. Director of Admissions Sharon Pinkney said the incoming class showcases the school's strong tradition of accepting students displaying academic excellence with a diversity of background and interests. Dean Rex Perschbacher and Law Student Association President Ché Salinas welcomed the students at the event.

The UC Davis School of Law is nationally recognized for a uniquely supportive atmosphere for the study of law. The attrition rate is extremely low and graduates continually score above the state average of the California Bar Examination.

NEW LAW SCHOOL LOGO UNVEILED

A logo design was unveiled as part of a new graphic identity system that more effectively reflects the law school's core components of rigorous legal scholarship, excellence in education and dedication to fostering a cooperative and supportive student atmosphere.

The law school chose for its logo a book radiating light to represent the importance of legal scholarship throughout the world. "Knowledge of legal scholarship is a powerful and vital part of the political, economic, and social fabric of the world," said Dean Perschbacher in a statement. "Legal scholarship sustains and builds communities, unites individuals, and challenges and supports governments."

Developing the logo is the beginning of a long-range marketing plan to establish a consistent graphic identity for the law school and promote its visibility in the community.

LAW SCHOOL LAUNCHES NEW WEB SITE

The wait is over! The UC Davis School of Law launched its new web site on Monday, August 22. The new site includes a complete re-design, new navigation and more content. The site will continue to be upgraded over the next few months with the addition of more photographs, additional design elements, search options, site index and additional content. User comments are greatly encouraged. Please send us your compliments, concerns and wishes.

LAW SCHOOL WELCOMED STUDENTS FROM NEW ORLEANS

Quick to respond to the needs of displaced law students from New Orleans, the UC Davis School of Law stepped forward to offer assistance to eligible students for the fall semester. In the wake of Hurricane Katrina, law students at Tulane University faced a closed campus and many of their classmates and faculty relocated to Houston and other states.

Students pursuing a law degree are particularly impacted by any interruption in a three-year full-time program. The first-year curriculum is structured and provides the essential framework for subsequent legal study. The summer months are often utilized for clerkships and internships with private and public firms and agencies where they obtain valuable research and legal skills. Any interruption in the cohesive study of law seriously impacts the students' education and training.

Law Schools throughout the country have opened their doors to New Orleans students. In many cases, schools are accepting second and third year students first to prevent a disruption to their education. This trend has left first year students wondering if they were going to be able to begin their studies.

The UC Davis School of Law is pleased to host three first-year law students from Tulane University this fall. Students started arriving in Davis from New Orleans within a week of the hurricane and were able to begin their legal education with the law school's Class of 2008.

The first few weeks of law school are often difficult and challenging for most students, and the Davis Class of 2008 has not only risen to that challenge, but also been there to offer assistance to their Tulane University classmates. Some Davis students offered assistance with housing, transportation and furniture. Other students, staff and faculty offered books and mentoring.

CAPITOL TOUR AND RECEPTION BIG HIT WITH STUDENTS AND ALUMNI

The Twelfth Annual Capitol Tour and Reception was held September 16. The event, which includes a tour of the state capitol and an opportunity to network with UC Davis School of Law alumni, faculty and staff, is always a highlight for first-year students.

The law school's close proximity to the state capitol and legislative government process provides numerous opportunities to students while in law school and after graduation. Many alumni who now hold federal, state and county judicial seats and who work at the highest levels of the federal and state governments gained valuable experience while attending Davis. Other graduates work in prestigious law firms across the country, as well as internationally. A large number of alumni are advocate lawyers.

This year's Capitol Reception speakers included Dean Rex Perschbacher and alumni Lawrence Brown '89, First Assistant United States Attorney for the Eastern District of California, and Kara Ueda '00, a UC Davis Law Alumni Association board member and associate at McDonough Holland & Allen in Sacramento. A reception followed at The Sutter Club where students had the opportunity to talk with law school alumni, faculty and staff.

The event is also a highlight for the many alumni who attend and enjoy meeting the new class and reconnecting with faculty and staff. This year's event was sponsored by Greenberg Traurig (formerly Livingston & Mattesich) at the Platinum Level; Orrick, Herrington & Sutcliffe LLP at the Silver Level; and Boutin Dentino Gibson Di Gusto Hodell Inc., Ellison, Schneider & Harris L.L.P., Hefner, Stark & Marois, LLP, McDonough Holland & Allen PC, Stoel Rives LLP and Wilke Fleury Hoffelt Gould & Birney LLP at the Bronze Level.

CAREER CENTER CONNECTS STUDENTS TO EMPLOYERS

This fall, the Career Center hosted numerous events for students to connect with potential employers. August, September and October are the On Campus Interview (OCI) season, and many legal employers visited the law school to conduct interviews for summer and entry-level associates.

These are mostly larger law firms who can predict their hiring needs six to nine months ahead of time and who have the resources to conduct interviews at law schools around the area and across the country.

The Career Center also provides information on how to get a job outside of OCI. In September, Mindy Baggish, the director of the center, gave a workshop on "Directly Applying for a Job." Other workshops included: "Post Interview Etiquette: How to Begin a Successful Career in International Law Practice;" and "Judicial Clerkship Interviewing Tips."

The UC Davis School of Law has a strong presence in law firms nationwide, and many alumni actively participate in recruiting Davis students and in providing guidance on career decisions. On September 26, Alumnus Mike Chase of Boutin Dentino Gibson DiGusto Hodell, Inc. held a workshop on judicial clerkship interviewing tips. Mike is a former judicial clerk for John T. Elfvin, Senior U.S. District Judge, Western District of New York (1997-1999) and Garland E. Burrell, Jr., U.S. District Judge, Eastern District of California (1999-2001).

Many students are interested in careers in public service. The career center also provides seminars on the public interest/public sector job search.

LAW SCHOOL RANKS IN TOP 10 FOR DIVERSITY

The Princeton Review's 2006 edition of the Best 159 Law Schools ranked Davis in the top 10 for "Best Environment for Minority Students" and "Most Diverse Faculty." The rankings are based on the percentage of the student body that is from underrepresented minorities, a student assessment of whether all students receive equal treatment by fellow students and the faculty, regardless of ethnicity, the percentage of the law school faculty that is from a minority, and a student assessment of whether the faculty comprises a broadly diverse group of individuals.

The Princeton Review is known for its annual college rankings based on surveys of students attending the schools. The annual release of the rankings generates a surge of attention and awareness of featured schools.

The Princeton Review profiles UC Davis as a supportive law school environment. One student is quoted as describing the faculty as working "diligently to build confidence and analytical skills in students rather than to send students screaming from the room." Another student comments that students are respectful of opposite points of view and usually continue the debate long after class is over. And regarding the quality of life, one student says it's "so high that many of the 3Ls never want to leave."

PROMINENT JURIST AND ACADEMIC DELIVERS ADDRESS ON SOCIAL JUSTICE

UC Davis Law Professor Cruz Reynoso, a prominent academic, jurist and social justice lawyer, delivered the Mario G. Olmos Memorial Lecture as the opening event of a symposium entitled "The New Face of California: The Great Central Valley" on Thursday, November 3 at UC Berkeley, Boalt Hall School of Law. The symposium focused on the changing demographics of California's central valley which has been fueled by immigration from around the world for several generations.

Professor Reynoso is a former California Supreme Court Justice and holds the Boochever and Bird Chair for the Study and Teaching of Freedom and Equality at UC Davis. He first gained national recognition as the director of the California Rural Legal Assistance where he fought for the rights of the poor from 1968 to 1972. He later served as a jurist with the 3rd District Court of Appeals in Sacramento from 1976-1982. Professor Reynoso then rose to become the first Latino to serve on California's Supreme Court where he was an associate justice from 1982-1987. Since 1993, he has been an active member of the U.S. Commission on Civil Rights, serving as vice chair from 1994 to 2004. In 2000, he was awarded the Presidential Medal of Freedom, the country's highest civilian honor.

PROFESSOR AWARDED HERITAGE AWARD

Professor Bill Hing, a descendant of detainees on Angel Island immigration station was awarded the Heritage Award by the Angel Island Immigration Station Foundation at a ceremony on San Francisco Bay, October 6.

AIIISF is a non-profit organization whose mission is to promote a greater understanding of Pacific Coast immigration and its role in shaping America's past, present and future. For the award, Professor Hing was cited for his long career in teaching, writing, and volunteering in the immigrant rights field.

Professor Hing is a Professor of Law and Asian American Studies at UC Davis. He teaches Judicial Process, Negotiations, Public Service Strategies and Asian American History, and directs the law school clinical program. Throughout his career, he has pursued social justice by combining community work, litigation, and scholarship. He is the author of numerous academic and practice-oriented books and articles on immigration policy and race relations. He is on the board of directors of the Asian Law Caucus and the Migration Policy Institute. He also serves on the National Advisory Council of the National Asian Pacific American Legal Consortium.

Professor Hing wrote about his parents' experience on Angel Island (in 1912 and 1924) in "No Place For Angels: In Reaction to Kevin Johnson," 2000 U. Ill. L. Rev. 559.

FAMILY PROTECTION CLINIC RECEIVES GRANT

The School of Law's Family Protection Clinic received $435,000 in funding from the U.S. Department of Justice (DOJ) as part of the Violence Against Women Act. Since 1999, when the DOJ first provided funds to establish the clinic at UC Davis and support its operation for the first 18 months, the Clinic has continually received grant money from the DOJ.

The Clinic is the only legal entity providing free representation to low-income victims of domestic violence in Yolo County. The County has a higher percentage of people living below the federal poverty level than the average for both California and the United States.

Established in collaboration with the pre-existing Sexual Assault and Domestic Violence Center in Woodland, law students enroll in the clinic for two semesters. Under the supervision of alumna Sarah Orr '92, clinic staff attorney, students are involved in every aspect of domestic violence cases, including representing clients at restraining order hearings and in family law matters involving divorce, separation, child custody, visitation, support and property issues. In addition to providing legal representation, students provide assistance and referrals for clients with issues, including public benefits, immigration, health care, housing, economics and others.

The clinical program emphasizes the importance and added effectiveness of addressing the complex problem of domestic violence from many different perspectives and emphasizes student education, direct client representation and community education. UC Davis law professor Martha West, a nationally recognized authority on women's legal rights, is the program's creator.

The Honorable Donna Petre of the Yolo County Superior Court said of the Davis law students who appeared in her family court, "They're taking complex family law cases and ensuring that people who wouldn't otherwise have legal services are represented."

LAMBDA LAW STUDENTS CELEBRATE COMING OUT WEEK

The Lambda Law Students Association celebrated National Coming Out Day on October 11 with a week of activities. Speakers included California Assemblyman Mark Leno, one of the first openly gay men elected to the Assembly, and Kinna Patelof of Equality California and Shane Caya of the Transgender Law Center.

October is National Lesbian, Gay, and Bisexual History Month. Inspired by existing celebrations such as African American History Month in February and Women's History Month in March, organizers sought to create a time when special attention could be focused on the contributions of lesbian, gay and bisexual people to world history.

PROFESSOR AMANN RECEIVES AWARD FROM AIDP

Professor Diane Marie Amann received the 2005 award for Article of the Year in International Criminal Law from the American National Section of the International Association of Penal Law (AIDP). The essay, "Abu Ghraib," appeared in 153 UNIVERSITY OF PENNSYLVANIA LAW REVIEW 2085

(2005). Professor Amann specializes in international human rights law and has taught in Paris and Ireland as well as the United States. She received the award this past weekend at the conference "Torture and the War on Terror" held at the Frederick K. Cox International Law Center at Case Western Reserve School of Law.

The AIDP was founded in Paris in 1924, with origins in the International Union of Penal Law founded in Vienna in 1889, and is the world's oldest and most prestigious scholarly association in the field of criminal justice.

OPEN HOUSE WELCOMED PROSPECTIVE STUDENTS

The UC Davis School of Law hosted an Open House on October 29. Prospective students filled the Moot Courtroom, as well as an overflow room, while Associate Dean Kevin Johnson, LSA President Ché Salinas and Admissions Director Sharon Pinkney welcomed them to King Hall.

A series of information sessions was offered, including workshops on Admission, Financial Aid, Career Services and Clinical Programs. Prospective students also had the opportunity to attend two faculty panels. Professors Lin, Onwuachi-Willig, Pruitt, Chacón, Elmendorf and Lewis discussed their areas of special interest and growing trends and career options in law.

Current Davis law students participated in two panels moderated by LSA President Ché Salinas. Students talked about the reasons they chose law school, what they expected versus what they discovered and how to survive law school. During lunch, a student organization fair was held in the courtyard and prospective students were invited to speak with organization representatives.

APALSA AWARDED "CHAPTER OF THE YEAR"

The Asian Pacific American Law School Association (APALSA) was honored with the "Chapter of the Year" award by the National Asian Pacific American Law School Association (NAPALSA) at the 25th Annual NAPALSA convention held in Chicago on October 20-22.

NAPALSA members selected the Davis chapter because of their dedication and commitment to educate, represent and advocate the interests of Asian Pacific American students and the community. The award stated that the association is "an inspiration for others, encouraging participation, leadership and communication."

The UC Davis School of Law released a new electronic photo gallery on its upgraded web site. Alumni and friends are encouraged to peruse the gallery, which features photographs of King Hall, the Law Library, the Campus, the Community and Events.

The Events section of the gallery is a dynamic, ever-changing site that displays photos of recent activities at the law school. Reunion photographs for the Classes of 1970, 1975 and 2000 and the 2005 Capitol Reception are now posted. Check back often to view photos from upcoming events, including the Class of 1980 reunion, 2005 Swearing-In Ceremony, the Barrett and Bodenheimer Lectures and Commencement 2006.

The gallery is located under "About the School" on the web site at <http://www.law.ucdavis.edu>.

The Times They Are A-Changin'

1965. Lyndon Johnson was President and the "Great Society," a set of domestic programs to end poverty and racial injustice, was set into motion. Over the next year, the Voting Rights Act of 1965 was signed into law and Federal programs, such as Head Start, Vista and Medicaid, were developed to assist low-income families.

The sixties were a time of economic growth and optimism. The Dave Clark 5, Herman's Hermits and The Supremes topped the music charts. "The Sound of Music" won best picture at the Academy Awards. And NASA launched Gemini III into earth's orbit with the United State's first two-person crew.

But the decade was also wrought with unrest. The Vietnam War was accelerating. Opposition to the war, including large-scale student protests and the public burning of draft cards, occurred across the country and on college campuses. The Civil Rights Movement was gaining momentum, and civil right marchers on their way from Selma to Montgomery were attacked by state and local police with billy clubs and tear gas. The nation was shocked by the images from Alabama shown on TV, and the day became known as Bloody Sunday.

CALIFORNIA DREAMIN'

During this time, the state of California was experiencing a population explosion with two-thirds of recent growth due to newcomers. People were drawn by the state's warm climate and natural beauty. The culturally rich lifestyle attracted people from all over the world. Songs by California bands, such as The Beach Boys in the early sixties and, later, the Grateful Dead and Jefferson Airplane, further portrayed a vibrant lifestyle and youthful culture, drawing young people to the state.

In the early sixties, California had one of the largest public university systems in the country, with seven University of California campuses and an enrollment of almost 50,000. Still, the need for more access to higher public education became apparent. Thinking forward, the UC Regents adopted a University Academic Plan that included establishing three new campuses and a new law school over the next few years.

The urgent need for a public law school in Northern California played a key role in the quick pace in which the UC Davis School of Law became a reality. Within just a few years from the time the UC Regents approved a plan to locate the law school at UC Davis, Edward L. Barrett Jr., a prominent constitutional law and criminal procedure scholar and teacher, was appointed the school's founding dean.

I'M A BELIEVER

The law school building was delayed due to a tie-up in legislative funding and a bond issue on the ballot. Dean Barrett pushed on, opening the law school in the fall of 1966 in a cluster of Speed-Space buildings, pre-built temporary structures that resembled steel railroad cars, with an entering class of 78 and a faculty of four.

Students and faculty alike remember this first year as an exciting and intellectually stimulating time. Although there were no common areas for students and faculty to meet after class hours, students were welcomed into faculty and staff's

LOOKING TO THE FUTURE

Ground Breaking on new building addition and King Hall renovation.

(bottom) The first graduating Class of 1969 outside the newly constructed King Hall. (right) Groundbreaking ceremonies for the law school building.

Dr. Martin Luther King Jr., the country's leader in the civil rights movement and a proponent of change through nonviolence, left an indelible mark on both this country and the law school.

homes. Often students and faculty would meet in downtown Davis at a favorite local pub or café and talk about the law and social and political issues well into the late hours of the night.

TELL IT LIKE IT IS

But the United States was becoming further enmeshed in the war in Vietnam, and the law community at Davis, as well as the rest of the country, became increasingly passionate about their political and social beliefs. As the founding class struggled with class work and casebooks, they also watched their nation and a world fraught with chaos.

During those first few years of the law school, between 1965 and 1967, the United States' military stepped up bombings in North Vietnam and committed more troops in South Vietnam, experiencing heavy American casualties. The Cultural Revolution was launched in China. The Six-Day War was fought between Israel and its Arab neighbors. Che Guevara was executed in Bolivia. And just a few days before breaking ground in April 1967 for the new Davis law school building, Greece was taken over by a military dictatorship.

Although a contentious and globally unstable time, there were symbols of hope and peace. Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr., the country's leader in the civil rights movement and a proponent of change through nonviolence, left an indelible mark on both this country and the law school.

On April 4, 1968, Dr. King was assassinated on a motel balcony in Memphis, Tennessee. His death had an immediate impact on UC Davis Law School students and faculty, who were so intimately involved in the legal, political and social debates of the times. When construction of the law school building was completed in the fall of 1968, a committee of students and faculty began working to name the building after Dr. King. The building was officially dedicated after Dr. King on April 12, 1969.

Today, the law school building—King Hall—stands as a tribute to Dr. King's efforts to achieve social and political justice by lawful and orderly means. The school is also a tribute to the founding faculty, students and staff, who laid the foundation for our school.

In the decades that followed the 60s, the law school continued to grow, adding programs and services, but still instilling in students the ideals of Martin Luther King, Jr.

The article, "Celebrating Forty Years of Excellence," continues in the Spring King Hall Counselor with information on the 70s and 80s. ■

•Part two and three of the "UC Davis School of Law 40 years" will be printed in the Spring '06 and Summer '06 King Hall Counselors.

Where Are They Now...

Assistant to Deans & Registrar Thelma Kido

Thelma joined the law school staff in 1964, and was appointed by Dean Barrett to organize the law school's administrative office before the arrival of the first law students in the fall of 1966.

Dean Barrett often remarked that the most important hire he ever made was that of Thelma Kido. "She was such a key person for so long." During a taping of an oral history of the law school, Dean Barrett recalls that before King Hall was completed, Thelma's office was opposite his, and when student's came in to talk to Thelma, he was able to hear what was going on at the law school. "When we moved into the new building I suddenly realized that I didn't know anymore what was going on."

Since retiring from the law school in 1986, Thelma has remained in Davis with her husband, Hiroshi. Thelma still attends many law school functions. In 1990, the Kido's established the Hiroshi and Thelma Kido Scholarship, which awards an outstanding third year student of Asian, Pacific or Filipino descent, especially those born or raised in Hawaii, and who have participated in the Asian American Law Students Association at King Hall.

Upon retiring, Thelma said she was looking forward to working with Hiroshi in their gardens, studying the organ, learning to golf, and pursuing "other interests!"

While the law school was under construction, Dean Ed Barrett and his wife, Beth, hosted many school functions at their Antioch street home in Davis. It was a good time to be in law school. The student body was small. The Dean and faculty were readily available to students. For a period of time, the five founding faculty members were even assigned 15 students who they would have over to their house.

Dean Barrett served as Dean from 1964 to 1971, and then taught at Davis until he retired in 1986. In 1992, Beth and Ed moved to Medford, Oregon. Beth passed away a few years ago, but Ed remains active. He serves on the board of his area's Senior Volunteer Program and drives the elderly to their doctor's appointments.

Recently, Ed has become an avid traveler. He just returned from a trip to Antarctica, and over the past year has traveled to Spain, Portugal, and China, to name just a few. He highly recommends the cruise from the Black Sea to the North Sea.

The Edward L. Barrett, Jr. Lectureship on Constitutional Law is held each year, and Ed will try to make it down from Oregon this February, that is, if he's not off to distant lands.

Professor of Law & Dean Daniel J. Dykstra

Since the founding of the school, Dan was an integral member of the community. He was the first faculty member recruited and hired by Dean Barrett when he heard Dan was thinking of leaving the University of Utah where he served as professor of law, dean of the College of Law and academic vice-president of the University of Utah. Dan arrived in Davis with his wife, Lily, and children, in 1966.

Dan's legacy to the law school spans over three decades of teaching. He served as the second law school dean between 1971 and 1974, and he continued to teach at the law school until his retirement in 1985, although "retirement" included teaching as an emeritus faculty member at UC Davis and the University of Hawaii until 1995.

Dan died in March 2000 of leukemia. That year the law school began a campaign to endow the "Daniel J. Dykstra Chair," with a goal of raising $350,000. The chair became a reality this past year with well over 100 alumni and friends of the law school participating in the fundraising.

In the spring 1973, Dean's memo in the Alumni Reporter, Dan said, "One of the gratifying developments since becoming Dean is the fact that alumni continue to take a real interest in the school." Over thirty decades later, this is still true. The Daniel J. Dykstra Chair stands as a tribute to Dan and to the generous support of the many alumni and friends of the law school who knew Dan.

Islam

America Looks at Immigration, Human Rights and Democracy

Throughout world history, ethnic and religious groups have fought amongst themselves and endured persecution and, at times, genocide. The Middle East, in particular, has experienced centuries of bloody unrest as Christians, Muslim and Jews fought over lands believed to be holy and exclusively their own.

The Middle East has always been of great interest to religious and political leaders and historians and scholars, but it is only recently, since 9/11 and the attacks by Muslim extremists, that so many Americans have turned their attention to this region. Over the days, weeks and months that followed 9/11, people watched a barrage of media images—the Twin Towers collapsing, the rings of The Pentagon burning, and families of the doomed airline Flight 93 passengers recounting final cell phone conversations with their loved ones before the airliner crashed into the rural fields of Pennsylvania.

POST 9/11: FEAR

Overnight, people were jolted from complacency. Americans could no longer pretend that they were impermeable to the fighting and conflict that still pervades much of the Middle East. Frantic for answers, people demanded to know how these terrorist attackers were allowed to enter and move about so freely in our country. How did they get student visas? Why were they allowed to stay so long?

American immigration policies came under scrutiny. Congress quickly passed several pieces of legislation, including the USA PATRIOT Act and the Enhanced Border Security and Visa Entry Reform Act. Then, in 2003, to further strengthen immigration enforcement, the responsibility for providing immigration-related services was transferred from the Immigration and Naturalization Service (INS) to the U.S. Citizenship and Immigration Services (USCIS), a bureau of Homeland Security. And just recently, the Department of Homeland Security announced a comprehensive multi-year plan to secure America's borders and reduce illegal migration, entitled the Secure Border Initiative.

With this crackdown on our borders, many people who have entered the U.S. for economic opportunity, religious and political freedoms and/or to escape persecution, have been caught up in the post 9/11 net. While all recent immigrants and visitors to this country have been affected by enhanced scrutiny and laws, the Muslim-American community has been most affected. Muslims became the target of hate crimes and bias by a minority of Americans. Immediately following 9/11, an Iraqi-American's restaurant was burned down in Massachusetts. A Sikh business owner was shot and killed in Arizona. Muslim women reported feeling particularly vulnerable because of their traditional dress.

While all recent immigrants and visitors to this country have been affected by enhanced scrutiny and laws, the Muslim-American community has been most affected.

Associate Dean of Academic Affairs and Professor of Law Kevin R. Johnson has written extensively on immigration and U.S. exclusionary policies. He says that historically waves of anti-immigration fervor occur when economic downturns squeeze the native-born, and that combined with post 9/11 fears of terrorism, we have a formula for another wave of anti-immigration fervor in the U.S., such as what occurred during World War II against Japanese-Americans.

But many Muslim-Americans feel that there has always been a climate of misunderstanding and mistrust in America toward the Muslim community. Many immigration and race scholars agree.

Like many other ethnic and religious groups, the largest Muslim immigration to America occurred in the 19th and 20th centuries as people arrived from the Middle East, Sub-Sahara Africa and Central and South-East Asia. Although assimilation into American communities was difficult for most early immigrant groups, Muslims found life in America to be particularly inhospitable. In the 1800s, they often worked long and difficult hours in mills, factories and shipyards, but they lacked the large extended families and religious community affiliations that other immigrants, such as the Irish and Italian, relied upon for support.

After World War I, though, and a period of Western colonial rule in the Middle East, a wave of Muslims immigrated to America for political and economic reasons. In the mid-1900s, Muslims from Eastern Europe and the Soviet Union arrived. More recently, as parts of the Middle East and Eastern Europe experienced political turmoil and war, significant numbers settled in America. In the past ten years, skilled Pakistani and Indian Muslim immigrants found work as doctors, engineers and scholars. Although American Muslims are a diverse group, having immigrated from all over the world, there are now large Muslim communities and religious centers in America that provide services to the Muslim community and promote the Islamic faith.

Life was just getting better. Until 9/11.

POST 9/11: RAISING AWARENESS

Four years have passed and the country is slowly moving from a climate of fear to a growing interest in Muslim-Americans and the Islamic religion and culture. At the UC Davis School of Law, the legal community has always been dedicated to fostering a climate of understanding and tolerance.

Law students at Davis are active in raising awareness. The Muslim Law Student Association (MLSA) is committed to educating peers about Islam and important legal and social issues affecting Islamic societies. This fall, MLSA encouraged law students to fast for Ramadan and hosted a law school community Iftar (breaking of the fast) in the student lounge. Other events planned for the year include Minority Reports, an annual event where students are invited to tell personal stories about their experiences being a minority or discuss a minority issue they are working on.

Four years have passed and the country is slowly moving from a climate of fear to a growing interest in Muslim-Americans and the Islamic religion and culture.

MLSA member and law student Wajahat Ali '07 is also a playwright. He captured the Muslim-American experience in his play "Domestic Crusaders," which takes place over one day in the life of a Pakistani-American family in the aftermath of 9/11. Since writing the play as an undergraduate, Ali has won critical acclaim for his work. The play has received numerous staged readings in the Bay Area and has been produced at the Thrust Theatre of Berkeley Repertory Theatre and at San Jose State University on the fourth anniversary of 9/11. The director of the Center for Literary Arts at San Jose State called Ali a major new voice in American literature and compared the impact of his play on Muslim-American Theatre as that of "A Raisin in the Sun," a play that captured the African-American experience so poignantly and inspired generations of theatergoers.

In addition, UC Davis Law Review published papers in a symposium issue, "Immigration and Civil Rights After September 11: The Impact on California," which features work from a distinguished group of scholars, attorneys and activists who spoke at the law school last April. The papers offer observations and insights about a full range of immigration developments, with a particular emphasis on the civil rights implications of the heightened immigration enforcement measures put into place after 9/11. Topics include: "The War on Terror, Racial Profiling, and Immigrants," "Detention of Immigrants:

Recent Developments and the Future," "Guest Workers," and "Activism in Immigrant Communities.

Other law students at Davis choose to work through the clinical programs to secure legal rights for all Americans. In one case, Civil Rights Clinic students secured for Muslim prisoners at a California state prison the right to practice their religion without fear of discipline. After seven years of litigation, the court eventually held that prison officials could no longer impose any form of discipline on Muslims for exercising their religious right to attend Jumu'ah, an hour-long religious service every Friday, and to wear half-inch beards, a religious practice.

The law faculty at Davis have also been active through their scholarship and teachings to increase awareness of the myriad of legal and social issues that impact immigrants in America. Many faculty have special interests that include immigration law and policy, ethnic studies, civil rights, critical race theory and international human rights law.

Professor Bill Ong Hing, a distinguished scholar in immigration law and race relations, authored the book Defining America Through Immigration Policy, which examines the nature and underlying purpose of U.S. immigration policies, including ethnic and racial targeting post 9/11. Professor Thomas Joo, an expert on race and the law, has also written on the loss of civil rights following a national crisis. In his article, "Presumed Disloyal:

Executive Power, Judicial Deference, and the Construction of Race Before and After September 11," which appeared in the Columbia Human Rights Law Review, he looks at both the disastrous consequences for Japanese Americans during World War II and Arab Americans after the World Trade Center and Pentagon attacks.

A recently launched immigration blog that assists law professors in their scholarship and teaching is edited by three Davis faculty members: Associate Dean Kevin Johnson, Professor Jennifer Chacón and Professor Bill O. Hing. The site, ImmigrationProf blog (lawprofessors.typepad.com/immigration), focuses on immigration and provides regularly updated permanent resources, links, and daily news and information of interest to law professors, legal scholars and immigration lawyers. The site reveals, though, that racial bias is still prevalent in this country, as evidenced by a November entry that describes the detention and questioning of five Muslim football fans at the Giants Stadium because they were congregating near an air duct on a night former President George Bush was in the stadium.

Legal scholars, law students, human rights activists and others in the community will need to continue their work to increase awareness of issues facing Muslim-Americans. Strides have been made, but there is still a long way to go. ■

Iranian Nobel Peace Prize Winner at UC Davis

Shirin Ebadi, an Iranian lawyer and social-justice activist who won the 2003 Nobel Peace Prize, gave a free talk about human rights and freedom of speech at UC Davis in May 2005. The event was co-sponsored by the UC Davis School of Law.

Ebadi's lecture, "Human Rights, Democracy and Islam," was held in Jackson Hall of the Robert and Margrit Mondavi Center for the Performing Arts. Her speech was in Farsi and translated by an English interpreter.

"Ms. Ebadi's work on behalf of children's and women's rights, human rights and freedom of expression within Iran shows a singular dedication to building a better society despite the immense political obstacles," said UC Davis Chancellor Larry N. Vanderhoef.

"Since our own trip to Iran one year ago last May," Vanderhoef added, "UC Davis has been pursuing its goal of reestablishing academic ties, reopening the free exchange of students and scholars and furthering cultural understanding with Ms. Ebadi's country. We believe her talk will build another bridge between our two peoples."

Ebadi's lecture here was coordinated by event leaders on campus from University Outreach and International Programs, the Middle East/South Asia Studies Program, and the School of Law, all of whom see a special connection between Ebadi's message and the UC Davis community.

Anthropology and women and gender studies professor Suad Joseph, who directs the ME/SA program, said UC Davis students will be inspired by Ebadi's lifelong professional activities in Iran.

"Shirin Ebadi was the first Iranian and first Muslim woman to receive the Nobel Peace Prize," Joseph said. "She took a brave stand after the Iranian revolution to protest the demotion of female judges and yet continued her work on behalf of freedom of speech and the rights of women and children."

Ebadi's work in public-interest law also sets an example for UC Davis law students, according to Kevin Johnson, the law school's associate dean for academic affairs.

"We're particularly happy that Shirin Ebadi is coming to UC Davis because her dedication to human rights and social justice echoes the focus at the UC Davis School of Law," he said.

UC Davis has a special interest in building ties to Iran. Last spring, Vanderhoef traveled there, accompanied by Sacramento businessman and UC Davis Foundation board member Mohammad Mohanna and several campus academic leaders.

UC Davis' interest in promoting cultural understanding with Iran and other countries comes at a time when Ebadi is using her prominence as a Nobel Peace Prize winner to continue championing the rights of refugees, women and children through periodic visits to U.S. universities, where she is reaching out to students and the surrounding communities.

Ebadi, born in 1947 into a family of academics and practicing Muslims, moved to Tehran with her family when she was a 1-year-old. She received her law degree from University of Tehran in 1969 and began serving as a judge in the Department of Justice. She was the first woman in the history of Iranian justice to have served as a judge.

While serving as a judge, she continued her education and earned a doctorate with honors in private law from University of Tehran in 1971. In 1975, she became the President of Bench 24 of the Tehran City Court.

Ebadi's career on the bench ended soon after the Islamic Revolution in 1979.

"Since the belief was that Islam forbids women to serve as judges, I and other female judges were dismissed from our posts and given clerical duties," Ebadi said in her autobiography posted on the nobelprize.org Web site. Although the women protested and the Iranian legal administrators promoted all former female judges to "experts" in the Justice Department, Ebadi said she requested an early retirement because she could not tolerate the situation any longer.

She was housebound for the next 13 years until obtaining a lawyer's license and setting up a private practice in 1992. Once licensed, Ebadi has litigated many cases, several of national renown, dealing with serial murder victims, freedom of expression issues in which journalists or their families have been accused or sentenced, child abuse and women's rights for mothers who have lost custody of their children. She is also a university professor.

Even before her Nobel Prize, in her quest to promote human rights, Ebadi delivered dozens of lectures throughout Europe and the United States.

Although she has been imprisoned several times for her work on religious freedom and free speech, Ebadi has rejected calls from Iranian reformers to become more active in politics. She does not consider herself a political leader, just a defense attorney.

WITNESSES TO WAR

In the past century, two world wars ravaged much of Europe, Africa and parts of Asia. In fact, every continent was directly affected, except Antarctica. Although warfare has spilled across tribal, state and national borders for millennia, it is only in the last one hundred years, with advances in communications, transportation and technology, that man has had the means to attack sovereign nations rapidly and simultaneously.

Modern technology has played a key role in informing people about the devastating human toll of war and the atrocities that often take place. Although photojournalists have documented wars since the invention of the camera in the early 1800s, including images of the U.S. Civil War, it is only recently with new developments in digital technology that a photo can be taken in a foreign country, downloaded onto a laptop, sent to a news agency, and within minutes be electronically available to the public via the Internet.

These pictures act as visual witnesses to war. Although interpretation of the photos may vary, the impact is not blunted by time or distance. The images become part of the public's collective memory of a particular war or atrocity. And when a war crime is committed and witnessed, the public demands justice.

Since war by its very nature involves at least two geopolitical parties, the question arises as to who decides and carries out justice. Various international organizations have in part worked to facilitate laws and mediate disputes, including the League of Nations and the United Nations, but it wasn't until 1998 when a permanent court, the International Criminal Court (ICC), was established to promote the rule of law and ensure that international crimes, such as crimes against humanity, genocide and crimes of war, do not go unpunished.

The ICC was established by a Statute that was adopted at an international conference in Rome. Over 139 states signed the treaty by the 2000 deadline, with seven countries voting against it, including the United States.

The Statute entered into force on July 1, 2002. Since then, anyone who commits any of the crimes under the Statute after that date will be liable for prosecution by the International Court.

The ICC is not without its critics, though, including the United States government. While supporters believe the Statute establishes a much needed doctrine of international law and procedures to adjudicate these principles, opponents argue that it goes against fundamental American notions of sovereignty and national independence, and that the court lacks international democratic legitimacy to prosecute since only one-third of the world's countries have signed the ICC treaty.

UC Davis Professor of Law Anupam Chander, a leading scholar in the law of globalization and digitization, takes up the question: Is international law democratic? Examining case studies that involve transnational legal processes, in an article recently published in the Yale Law Journal, he concludes that international law does indeed operate through national democratic processes, permitting review, revision and rejection.

Collaborating with foreign nations through international law enhances the ability of a people to control the elements of their environment. He says, "The part of international law that purports to be superconstitutional—jus cogens—can be seen as representation reinforcing, supplying minority protections in a world that has sadly come to see the need for them."

Although war and some procedure for justice has been around since the earliest days of man, it is only in this last decade that a permanent treaty-based, international criminal court has been established to complement national criminal jurisdictions. Debate over its democratic legitimacy will surely continue. ■

RETURNS TO KING HALL

Sally Schwettmann '04, the Law Students Association President in 2003-2004, has returned to King Hall to work with reconnecting alumni to the law school.

What did KH mean to you?

I consider my being able to attend UC Davis School of Law as one of the most fortuitous experiences of my life. As a student, and now as a member of the staff, I have never been in such a supportive, collegial environment. I developed great relationships, not only with my classmates, but with the faculty and staff, as well.

What have you been doing since graduation?

After the expense of the bar exam, I had to move back home to New Mexico. I started substitute teaching in a small, rural school district in northern New Mexico while I looked for a job. In November, I learned I passed the bar exam and was ready to start my legal career. However, the district lost a teacher a few weeks later, and I was asked to stay on for the remainder of the school year. I accepted and was the high school and middle school gifted facilitator until I moved back to Davis in June.

What brought you back to KH as Associate Director of Alumni Relations?

Last spring I was asked if I would be interested in coming back to King Hall to help reconnect alumni to the law school. I was LSA president when the big fee increases hit and understood the need for alumni support. I was excited to be able to give back to King Hall, an institution that enriched my life in so many ways.

What does your job include?

I work with the Marketing Director and the Assistant Dean of Administration. Much of our focus thus far has been to create an infrastructure to ensure the law school has the capability to keep our alumni connected to King Hall in a meaningful way. We have taken on very exciting endeavors like building an online community, rolling out more alumni events, and educating not only our alumni, but also our current students, faculty, and staff about the importance of giving to the law school.

How long will you be at KH?

I would like to stay at King Hall long enough to see most of our projects move from the design stage to implementation. As an alum, I feel that I have a vested interest in these ventures, and the best part of my job is knowing that what I am working on today will benefit King Hall and its students for years to come.

What do you think is important for alumni to know about King Hall?

Students at King Hall today are just as talented and committed as our alumni and their classmates were when they were at King Hall. However, today's students face fees that are dramatically higher than those faced by most of our alumni—including those who graduated as early as 2003. Alumni support of King Hall is critical to ensure that UC Davis School of Law remains an accessible top-tier public law school and continues to attract the best and brightest students and faculty.

BUILDING A LEGACY OF

Giving

Over the years, alumni, faculty, staff and friends of King Hall have made a difference in the lives of students by donating to the King Hall Annual Fund, scholarships, faculty chairs and other campaigns. The 2004-05 year was no different. Due to their generous support, the School of Law has significantly expanded course offerings, added faculty in various emerging legal disciplines, supported students through financial aid, improved classroom technology, provided support for student organizations, and enhanced the law library. With these enhancements, our school has become stronger academically, the curriculum richer, and the opportunities for students broader. Besides the exceptional curriculum and faculty and the school's outstanding national ranking, UC Davis retains its supportive and collegial atmosphere.

The 2004-05 King Hall Annual Fund campaign saw an increase in participation and celebrated its first ever class gift. This past May, the Class of 2005 launched a class gift campaign. With generous matching gifts from Dean Rex Perschbacher and Alumni Association Board of Directors Phil Satre '75 and Carol Livingston '80, the Class of 2005 raised nearly $23,000 to benefit vital priorities at King Hall. With 56 gifts and pledges, the Class of 2005 raised a gift from 32% of its members—the highest annual class participation ever! This is particularly impressive when you consider the many competing priorities faced by our third-year students—including looming student loan payments and the pressure of finding a job after graduation. The Class of 2005 set a high bar for future graduating class gifts. Eager to beat this impressive record, the Class of 2006 is already organizing their class gift.

The 2004-05 campaign also saw an increase in alumni, faculty/staff and friend support. Several class reunions set fundraising priorities and overall giving and participation increased. Our alums and friends have created a sense of momentum that will build a legacy of giving.

Thank you to all alums, students, faculty, staff, and friends who donated in 2004-2005. Your support is greatly appreciated and will make a difference for the future of our school. If one person can make a difference, think what 5600 alumni and friends can do!

Thank you

Donor Rolls

DONOR PROFILE

Scott P. Peartree '05

The graduating class of 2005 was the first class in recent years to make an organized gift to the UC Davis School of Law. Scott participated in the Class Gift campaign that netted $4,540, with total benefit to the School of $22,562, thanks to the generosity of matching gift-fund donors.

"Given today's political climate, public institutions can no longer depend on taxpayers or politicians distributing tax dollars as reliable supporters of education," Scott says. "Unfortunately, it seems like public universities have to rely more heavily on private sources of funding to maintain a high standard of educational and student-oriented services. It is with this in mind that I gave to King Hall."

While at Davis, Scott was secretary and vice-president of the Law Students Association. "Davis offers the combination of an excellent academic reputation and relatively small size," he says. "On top of that, King Hall's reputation as a "friendly" law school should not be underestimated. Students are driven by personal goals to learn and prepare for practice, as opposed to merely topping their classmates." Scott believes this results in "a very productive environment that encourages supportive academic and social interactions among students while still allowing a focus and desire that is fundamental to a traditional law school experience."

Scott is now working as an associate with Littler Mendelson in Fresno, California. His Annual Fund donation not only leaves a lasting legacy from the Class of 2005, but will support students and innovative, diverse programs; preserve accessibility to a King Hall education; insulate school from state budget cuts; and strengthen the school and increase the value of a King Hall degree.

"If we, as part of the school's community, expect others in California to support King Hall," Scott says, "Then we, as a group, must be the first to contribute to its success."

Is Your Name Missing?

Listed in the 2004-05 Donor Rolls are gifts to the UC Davis School of Law. If your name has not been included and you think it should be or it is included but not at the level you believe to be appropriate, there may be several reasons why:

- You made your gift before or after the 2004-2005 campaign period. The law school's fiscal year is July 1 through June 30. For the 2004-05 year, we permitted our alumni and friends to give to the 2004-05 campaign during the fall of 2005.
- You gave more during this time period than you realized. Please check the next giving level for your name.
- You made a gift to a specific fund such as the building fund, a scholarship fund or chair. These are listed as separate sections in the donor roll. Please check the front of the donor roll section for specific funds. The King Hall Annual Fund list is the largest section and begins on page 19.
- You made a gift to the UC Davis Foundation but your transaction was not designated for the law school.
- We omitted your name in error. If we have made a mistake, we would like to hear from you so we may correct our error. Please call us at 530-754-5326.

DONOR PROFILE

Sally Lu Lake '77

Sally Lu Lake '77 established the Joseph and Jan Cutter Lake Scholarship to honor her parents for their commitment to personal growth and advancement through education. The scholarship was set up in 2001 with a matching gift from the IBM Corporation.

Sally says she was fortunate to attend King Hall when tuition was reasonable and to have parents who paid for most of her education. "There are many people well suited to lawyering who do not have this support," she says. "I wanted to make a contribution to their education, and in doing so, honor my parents."

As associate general counsel of the IBM Research legal department, Sally is responsible for providing general legal and patent advice to IBM's research labs in the U.S. and Zurich and joint support, with location counsel, for labs in Israel, India, China, and Japan. Sally joined IBM in 1977 at their Chicago headquarters, and she worked in the group which brought out IBM's first personal computer, including doing the work to acquire rights to customize and remarket third party application software. "We are lawyers for the scientist," she says. "Our product is intellectual property, and we are on the leading edge of many technical trends, such as the world's fastest—for now—supercomputer and open source software."

While at Davis, Sally appreciated receiving a high quality education in a town with a high quality of life. "King Hall had high standards without engaging in the Socratic browbeating popular at many other law schools," she says. "I wouldn't have fared well at those other places."

Sally continues to value the words of her King Hall professors. She keeps a copy of Professor Wydick's Plain English for Lawyers above her desk and frequently refers other attorneys to it. One of Sally's Pet peeves is incompetent and Latin-laced legal writing. "It's well worth learning how to communicate succinctly and effectively with clients and others."

Sally now lives in Patterson, New York with her husband, Bill. She was bitten by the family history research bug in 1999, from which she says she's never recovered.

DONOR PROFILE

Kara K. Ueda '00

Kara has served on the School of Law's alumni association board of directors since 2002 and is a regular contributor to the law school's annual fund.

"I could never give enough back to the law school as it gave to me," she says. "Besides receiving a first-rate public law school education and having numerous doors opened that I never even knew existed, the administration, faculty, staff, and my fellow students made the entire experience one I look back upon fondly."

After graduation, Kara worked as a staff attorney for the League of California Cities, and then joined the law firm of McDonough Holland & Allen PC in Sacramento where she practices public law with many other UC Davis grads. She works in the Public Law/Redevelopment practice group and currently serves as Deputy City Attorney to the cities of Davis and Paso Robles and as General Counsel to the First Five Yuba Commission.

Kara is committed to supporting the future of King Hall. "I hope that the law school is able to continue to attract students who want to pursue careers in the public interest and public service and that it can find a way to do so in spite of the recent fee increases," she says. "I especially hope that the spirit of camaraderie and cooperativeness that forty years of King Hall students enjoyed is a spirit that will continue to endure."

Mock Interview Program Volunteers

The mock interview program takes place every fall immediately prior to Fall OCI. Alumni who practice in Sacramento are contacted by CSO to participate as mock interviewers. We are always impressed with how many graciously accept our invitation to participate. They come from all sectors, and dedicate 20 minutes to "actual" interviewing and 10 minutes to critiquing the interviewee's performance. It is a mutually gratifying experience for all who participate, and extremely popular with our current students. For more information on the Mock Interview Program, please contact Career Services Office at 530.752.6574 or by email at lawcareer@ucdavis.edu.

Keeping the Dream Alive

KING HALL
ANNUAL FUND

YOU CAN MAKE A DIFFERENCE in the lives of King Hall students. State assistance for UC law schools has dramatically decreased, shifting the financial burden to students. For most, the burden is too great. Through these changing financial times, UC Davis School of Law stands firm in its commitment to be a leader in offering an excellent education to a diverse student body and is dedicated to fostering a cooperative and supportive student atmosphere through a sense of community.

WE NEED YOUR HELP TO CONTINUE THIS LEGACY.

Please help us support King Hall students by giving to the King Hall Annual Fund. The King Hall Annual Fund is a critical, broad-based fund, created by alumni and friends, which directly supports students in many important ways. Every dollar raised goes to support students through scholarships, loan repayment assistance, technology/facility upgrades, increased funding for academic programs and our library's collection of serials and books and alumni services.

Three ways to make a gift:

- 1 Complete the annual fund form attached in this issue of the King Hall Counselor and mail to the UC Davis School of Law External Relations Office in the envelope provided.
- 2 Visit our on-line giving form at <http://www.law.ucdavis.edu/alumni/giving>
- 3 Call us at 530-754-5328.

Every gift makes a difference in the lives of King Hall students – including yours!
